📝 Project Report – Digital Communication Reflection (100–150 words)

In 2013, Justine Sacco, a PR executive, tweeted an offensive joke before boarding a long-haul flight to South Africa. By the time her plane landed, the tweet had gone viral under the hashtag #HasJustineLandedYet, she had been widely condemned online, and her employer had terminated her contract — all before she had internet access to respond. This incident illustrates how a single moment of poor digital judgement can cause irreversible professional and reputational damage.

What could have been done differently? Quite simply — the tweet should never have been sent. The core lesson is to pause before posting, especially on emotionally charged or sensitive topics. Applying a basic filter — "Would I say this in a boardroom or classroom?" — is often enough to prevent such errors. As Digital Ambassadors, it is our role to share exactly this kind of awareness with our peers.
